

Side #1

Sammy, Ethel, Jeremy, Jeanette

Sammy: Hello, everyone and welcome to Trivia, Trivia, Trivia! That's three rounds of trivia for triple the fun. We'll be starting soon. Just give me a few minutes to finish setting up.

Ethel: Tensions are high tonight, and I hate to say this, dear, but your lateness didn't help.

Sammy: Tully kept me on the phone going over the details of the tournament, but that made me late so the call backfired.

Ethel: Even if it's not perfect, tonight will sure be fun. Even if the exes are creating some drama, and there's already a good deal of trash talking amongst the teams, and unpleasant rumors of cheating are resurfacing. Still. Fun for all! Do you need any help? I'm sure the other grannies at my table and I could help.

Sammy: No, I'm fine.

Ethel: Well, here's a little snack for you, dear.

Jeremy: Hey! Are you trying to butter up the judge?

Ethel: I'm just giving him something to keep up his strength. With the hurt feelings amongst losers, challenges to questions, and long-standing feuds, well, it might be a long night.

Jeremy: I'm not buying your sweet, old lady act. You're trying to see the questions, aren't you?

Ethel: Never. I can't abide cheating.

Sammy: The questions are locked up. No one can see them early.

Jeremy: You're sure?

Jeanette: Jeez, Jeremy, can you stop it? If you don't trust the game, don't play.

Jeremy: You'd love that, wouldn't you?

Jeanette: If you didn't play? If you stopped coming to these games like you should have six months ago? If you stopped making it awkward for everyone here? Yes, Jeremy, I would love that.

Jeremy: Awkward? Awkward! If anyone makes it awkward, you do! You're the one who stole my team.

Jeanette: I can't help it if most of the team sided with me.

Jeremy: Sided with you because you bribed them with free appetizers.

Jeanette: Sided with me because they know what a know-it-all jerk you are.

Jeremy: If they knew who you really were, they—

Sammy: And we're ready to start!
