

Side 2

Riley: You seem very nervous. Do you have something to confess? Make sure to look at the camera.

Cora / Nigel: Ignore the camera, dear. In fact, cameraman, go away. This might be delicate, like spun sugar.

Megan / Mikey: You're barking up the wrong tree. I'm not nervous and I haven't done anything wrong.

Riley: It does seem strange that you're a competitor here.

Megan / Mikey: You don't think I'm talented?

Riley: I think it's weird that you're baking chocolate desserts when you've made it clear that you would rather be making dog treats.

Megan / Mikey: Dogs are a million times better than people. I don't see what's strange about that.

Riley: But this competition is about people.

Megan / Mikey: And this competition pays more than dog treat contests. It's easier for human judges to make comments about their food than for puppies.

Cora / Nigel: You must be very talented to make delicious things for two differing audiences, and I can see how being on this show could be a wonderful opportunity to spread the message about these skills and your small business.

Megan / Mikey: Thank you. Somebody understands.

Cora / Nigel: Which must be why it was so upsetting when Jeffrey insulted your efforts.

Megan / Mikey: He insulted everyone.

Cora / Nigel: He said your food was for the dogs. And he meant it as an insult.

Megan / Mikey: He didn't know what he was talking about. His job is to be mean and awful.

Riley: Maybe you wanted him fired. Permanently.
